BAT SELF-STUDY COURSE

BAT Self-Study Course

Students Learn at Own Pace

Our BAT Self-Study course enables students to learn the DOT Department of Transportation alcohol testing regulations at their own pace. Students who are studying to become Breath Alcohol Technicians for the first time can take as much time as necessary to absorb all the information in each unit. BAT's who are re-certifying can move more quickly as they reinforce the course material they remember, and focus any changes in the procedures. Self Check questions at the end of each unit let each student know if their pace is appropriate to learn the material.

Covers DOT Regulations and Protocol

The BAT Self-Study Course proficiency in CFR Part 40 regulations, the first of two elements required for BAT certification. Mastery of the DOT rules and regulations is a prerequisite for training on the use of an evidential breath testing instrument. the BAT Self-Study Course, by itself, does not certify a student as a Breath Alcohol Technician. Students must also be trained to proficiency using an evidential breath testing instrument to be certified as a BAT.

Self-Study Course Reduces Classroom Time

The DOT model curriculum outlines a full day of instruction to cover the material in our BAT Self-Study Course. Our BAT Self-Study Course substitutes for the first day of two days of training, allowing training to be completed in one day. The use of our BAT Self-Study Course allows instructors to maximize classroom time for hands-on practice using the breath alcohol testing instrument.

Use with any Evidential Breath Testing Instrument

The course material included in our BAT Self-Study Course is generic and is not specific to any instrument. The CFR Part 40 rules and regulations are the basis for all DOT alcohol testing. The BAT Self-Study Course does not instruct on the operation of any breath testing instrument, and is appropriate for teaching students the DOT alcohol testing rules and regulations prior to training on any model instrument.
